

Contents

List of illustrations	ix
Acknowledgements	xi
1 Introduction	1
2 A new constitutional moment	5
Constitutional equilibrium	5
Digital revolution	10
Power over digital lives	12
Orwellian nightmares	13
New rulers	14
Digital rights	16
Enhanced freedoms	17
Higher risks	19
Constitutional change	21
3 Constitutional counteractions	25
Targeted transformations	25
Four examples	25
Right to digital information	25
Due process online	28
Right to Internet access	30
Data protection	32
Uneven elaboration	34
4 Norms beyond the state	37
A functional approach	37
Constitutions and declarations	40
Constitutional charters	40
Limits of constitutions	42
Internet bills of rights	44

Public and private legislators 46

Advantages of ordinary law 47

Some examples 48

Lex digitalis 50

Lex Facebook 52

Code as a constitution 54

Courts and arbitrators 55

National and supranational courts 55

Private arbiters 58

ICANN's arbitrators 59

5 The constitutionalisation of the digital society 62

Constitutional pluralism 62

The age of globalisation 63

Multilevel theory 65

Double reflexivity 67

A single phenomenon 70

Plurality and fragmentation 73

Progressive translation 74

Societal input 74

6 Digital constitutionalism 76

Constitutionalism vs constitutionalisation 76

The values of constitutionalism 79

Constitutionalism in the digital age 81

A new constitutionalism? 84

7 Towards an Internet constitution? 88

'Bytes can never hurt me' 88

The end of innocence 90

A constitution for the Internet 92

Lessig: The constitution in the Internet 93

Teubner: Civil constitutions 94

Pernice: The constitution of the Internet society 95

Rodotà: A charter of rights for the Internet 97

Following Rodotà's model 101

Internet bills of rights 102

Constitutional tone 105

Limited scholarship 107

A constitutional role? 111

Datasets 112

8 The force of declarations	114
Proto-constitutional discourses	114
Experimentalism	117
Communicability	120
Gradualism	122
Compensation and stimulation	126
9 Understanding the digital society	129
A new law of the horse?	129
Litmus test	132
A complex delimitation	134
What is really 'the Internet'?	139
Datasets	139
Institutions	141
Reasons	143
Relations	145
Future-proof norms	146
10 Empowering global people	150
Universal reach	150
Restricting private power	154
An enlarged social contract	157
Participatory deliberation	160
Theoretical models	161
Individuals	163
Civil society	164
National parliaments	166
International organisations	168
Global multistakeholder forums	169
A new constituent power	171
11 Translating fundamental rights	173
An aerial view	173
Common roots	174
Human dignity	175
Life, liberty, and security	176
Protection of children and disabled people	177
Right to a healthy environment	178
Economic freedom	178
Online as offline	179
Freedom of expression	181

viii Contents

Freedom and secrecy of correspondence 184

Freedom of association and assembly 185

Generalisation and re-specification 186

Non-discrimination 187

Right to privacy 189

Due process 191

12 Constitutional innovation 193

New rights 193

Data protection 193

E-democracy 198

Internet access 200

A right to a digital forum 202

Public service value 203

Responsibilities 205

Governance 207

13 Conclusion 209

Contrasting constitutional anaemia 209

The legacy of Internet bills of rights 212

Challenges of digital constitutionalism 215

Appendix A 218

Bibliography 221

Index 239