

Contents

Acknowledgements	ix
Introduction: Affective Encounters and Reflexive Representations	1
Affect and the Disability Encounter	8
Disability Studies, Emotion, and Exploitation	13
Genre Fiction and Reflexive Representations	17
Overview	21
1 Horror: Fearful Bodyminds	27
Why Disability Studies is Afraid of Horror	30
Why Horror Scholars are Afraid of Disability	33
Stephen King's Duma Key	35
Monstrous Uncertainty: Thomas Harris's Hannibal Lecter Novels	40
Conclusion: Disturbing Representations	50
2 Character and Closure: Disability in Crime	53
Disabled Detectives	56
Affect and Achievement in Jeffery Deaver's Lincoln Rhyme Novels	57
Investigating Critical Practices: The Detective and the Supercrip	62
Unreflexive Representations: Peter Robinson's Friend of the Devil	65
Disabled Villains	69
Ambiguous Identities and Fantasies of Identification	72
Conclusion: Disability and the Altar of Closure	78

3	Wondrous Texts: Science Fiction	81
	Disability and Wonder	82
	Science Fiction and Wonder	87
	Lois McMaster Bujold's Vorkosigan Saga	93
	Affective Uncertainty: Peter Watts's Rifters Trilogy	98
	Conclusion	107
4	Fantasy: Affirmation and Enchantment	109
	Disability in Fantasy	113
	Metanarratives and the Mega-Novel: George R.R. Martin's 'A Song of Ice and Fire'	115
	Grimdark and Disability: Joe Abercrombie's 'The First Law'	124
	Conclusion	133
5	Desirable Futures: Romance	135
	Undesirable Futures	139
	Romance, Cure, and the Curative Imaginary	142
	Affective Imaginings and Reflexive Representations: Mary Balogh's 'Simply' Quartet	152
	Conclusion: Feeling Disability	159
	Conclusion: Reading and Feeling	161
	Genre Reading as Affective Practice	163
	Valuing Genre(s)	166
	Evaluative Approaches and Methodological Imperatives	169
	Works Cited	173
	Disability in Genre Fiction: An Annotated Bibliography	187
	Index	201