PIERO DELLA FRANCESCA 253

Of the Perspective of Painting (1480-1490). Book I: Points, lines and plane surfaces; Painting consists of three principal parts, which we name drawing, measurement, and coloring; Every quantity of size is represented in the eye within an angle; All bases seen within the same angle, even if they are in different positions, appear the same to the eye; [The problem is] from a given eye [point of view] to represent on a determined picture plane the designated plane [perspectively] foreshortened; Next I must correct the error of those not very skilled in this science. Book II: Cubic objects, four-sided pilasters, and round and many-sided columns; [The problem is] to place above a foreshortened four-sided surface a foreshortened cubic object in the same picture plane and the same distance from the eye as the said foreshortened surface. Book III: Of heads and capitals, bases, ir-
