

CONTENTS

Preface	page	ix
Table of cases		xii
1	Introduction: the usable past	1
	1. Precedent	1
	2. Positivism and precedent	14
	3. A theory of precedent?	22
2	Why does English law have a doctrine of precedent?	31
	1. The formation of a doctrine of precedent	31
	a. The ambiguous role of classical legal positivism	37
	b. Precedent and reason	48
3	Precedents as reasons	58
	1. Looking for a certain ratio	67
	a. The complexity of case-law	68
	b. Definitions and tests	76
	c. The point of the search	90
	2. Shortcuts to reason	92
	3. Pre-emptive precedent?	99
	4. Conclusion	108
4	Distinguishing, overruling and the problem of self-reference	111
	1. Distinguishing	113
	2. Overruling	116
	3. The power to overrule oneself	122
	4. The authority of the Practice Statement	129
	a. Constitutional impropriety	131
	b. 'Believe me, I always lie'	139

5	Why follow precedent?	150
	1. Consequentialist justifications	153
	2. Deontological arguments	167
	3. Conclusion	182

	Index	184
--	--------------	-----