

Boxes

1.1	Taiyuan: life at the edge of the Loess Plateau	20
1.2	Suzhou: a “land of fish and rice”	22
2.1	Beijing: forming an imperial capital	45
3.1	How important were cities in Chinese society?	57
3.2	Chang’an and its hinterland	62
3.3	The tea trade: a catalyst for growth	69
3.4	Höhhhot and its hinterland	72
4.1	Shenzhen, Pudong, and Xiong’an: re-directing the urban system from above	89
4.2	The Greater Bay Area/Pearl River Delta: regional urban systems and airport development	95
5.1	Second-generation migrants in cities	115
5.2	Educating migrant children	121
6.1	Zhongguancun: China’s “Silicon Valley”	133
6.2	Shenyang: an industrial giant in decline	150
7.1	Residents’ role in the fate of neighborhood redevelopment	172
7.2	Internet citizen participation through social media	174
8.1	Ordos, China’s infamous ghost city	189
8.2	Urban land and political competition	194
9.1	Local government financing vehicle (LGFV): the case of Shanghai Chengtou	210
9.2	Beijing Metro Line 4: public private partnership (PPP) with Chinese characteristics	214
10.1	Housing as investment: owning multiple dwellings	233
10.2	Bubble and burst: affording a home in urban China	242
11.1	Catching the CBD fever: Harbin’s new downtown	256
11.2	Gated communities	267
12.1	Dancing in the streets: informal dance craze in Beijing	286
12.2	Four lives of New China Square, Höhhhot: the evolution of public squares and recreation	288
13.1	The cost of living in Shanghai	299

13.2	A triple bind: elderly, unemployed migrants	307
14.1	Share bikes in the kingdom of bicycles	326
14.2	From “little bread loaves” to @ant: tiny vehicles and the urban environment	328
14.3	Green Beijing, Green Olympics	337