

Contents

|                              |                 |
|------------------------------|-----------------|
| List of illustrations | page xii |
| Preface               | xiii            |
| Acknowledgements      | xiv             |

Introduction: the challenge 1

Anthropocentrism 3

The literary and cultural criticism 3

A crisis of the 'natural' 5

The natures of nature 6

A reading 8

First quandary: climate change 10

Romantic and anti-romantic

Chapter 1 Old world romanticism 15

Romantic ecology 15

The self-evidence of the natural? 18

The inherent greenness of the literary? 19

A reading: the case of John Clare 21

Deep ecology 23

Chapter 2 New world romanticism 25

A reading: retrieving Walden 30

Wild 33

|   |    |
|---|----|
| Chapter 3 Genre and the question of non-fiction      | 35 |
| ‘You don’t make it up’                                      | 36 |
| Fiction or non-fiction?                                     | 38 |
| An aesthetic consumerism                                    | 39 |
| A reading: genres and the projection of animal subjectivity | 42 |
| Second quandary: fiction or non-fiction?                    | 44 |
|   |    |
| Chapter 4 Language beyond the human?                 | 46 |
| A realist poetics   | 47 |
| The Spell of the Sensuous                            | 48 |
| Third quandary: how human-centred is given language?        | 52 |
|   |    |
| Chapter 5 The inherent violence of western thought?  | 55 |
| The archetypal eco-fascist?                                 | 59 |
| The forest  | 60 |
|   |    |
| Chapter 6 Post-humanism and the ‘end of nature’?     | 63 |
| A reading: Frankenstein                              | 66 |
| Ecology without nature?                                     | 69 |
|   |    |
| The boundaries of the political                      |    |
| Fourth quandary: the crisis of legitimation                 | 74 |
|   |    |
| Chapter 7 Thinking like a mountain?                  | 77 |
| The aesthetic   | 80 |
| Fifth quandary: what isn’t an environmental issue?          | 85 |

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| Chapter 8 Environmental justice and the move 'beyond nature writing'  | 87  |
| Social ecology   | 89  |
| A reading: A River Runs Through It                                    | 90  |
| Environmental criticism as cultural history?                                 | 93  |
| Sixth quandary: the antinomy of environmental criticism                      | 94  |
|    |     |
| Chapter 9 Two readings: European ecojustice                           | 96  |
|    |     |
| Chapter 10 Liberalism and green moralism                              | 102 |
| The limits of liberal criticism  | 105 |
| A reading: William and Dorothy Wordsworth                                    | 108 |
| Seventh quandary: the rights of the yet-to-be-born                           | 110 |
|    |     |
| Chapter 11 Ecofeminism  | 111 |
| An écriture ecofemine?  | 114 |
| 'Nature provides us with few givens'   | 117 |
|    |     |
| Chapter 12 'Post-colonial' ecojustice                                 | 120 |
| Environmentalism as neocolonialism?  | 120 |
| Is there yet a specifically environmental post-colonial criticism?           | 122 |
| Colonialism as the 'Conquest of nature'                                      | 123 |
| A reading: Amitav Ghosh, The Hungry Tide                              | 126 |
| Eighth quandary: overpopulation  | 127 |
|    |     |
| Chapter 13 Questions of scale: the local, the national and the global | 130 |
| Methodological nationalism   | 131 |
| Literary 'rehabitation'?   | 132 |
| Questions of scale   | 136 |
| Ecopoetry  | 139 |

Science and the struggle for intellectual authority

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| Chapter 14 Science and the crisis of authority                                | 143 |
| The disenchantment thesis  | 143 |
| Facts versus values? a reading, Annie Dillard's'Galápagos'                       | 145 |
| The 'naturalistic fallacy'   | 145 |
| Against the facts–values split   | 148 |
| Ecology, 'ecology' and literature  | 151 |
| Hubert Zapf, Literature as Cultural Ecology                                   | 153 |
| Chapter 15 Science studies  | 156 |
| Studying science as a kind of behaviour  | 156 |
| The Selfish Gene  | 157 |
| Donna Haraway  | 158 |
| Ninth quandary: constructivism and doing justice tonon-human agency              | 163 |
| Chapter 16 Evolutionary theories of literature                                | 165 |
| The Standard Social Science Model  | 165 |
| Literature and human nature  | 167 |
| Chapter 17 Interdisciplinarity and science:two essays on human evolution | 171 |
| Tenth quandary: the challenge of scientific illiteracy                               | 176 |
| The animal mirror   |     |
| Eleventh quandary: animal suffering versusecological managerialism               | 180 |

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| Chapter 18 Ethics and the non-human animal  | 183 |
| ‘Kiss goodbye to the idea that humans are qualitatively different from other animals’              | 185 |
| Human–animal   | 186 |
| Twelfth quandary: reading the animal as ‘construct’  | 190 |
|    |     |
| Chapter 19 Anthropomorphism   | 192 |
| An art of animal interpretation  | 195 |
| A reading: The Wind in the Pylons   | 198 |
|    |     |
| Chapter 20 The future of ecocriticism?  | 202 |
| Final brief quandary: what place environmental criticism in the modern ‘University of Excellence’? | 203 |
|    |     |
| Notes   | 204 |
| Further reading   | 231 |
| Index   | 244 |