1 What this book is about	1
Why focus on committees to understand intra-PPG politics?	3
The plan of this book	4
2 A review of theories and literature on committees' roles and purposes	7
The theoretical debate – congressional perspectives and ‘keeping tabs’	7
The distributive theory of legislative organisation: ‘high demanders’ in ‘outlying’ committees	7
The informational theory: committees as representative ‘microcosms’ of the chamber	10
Committees controlled by the PPG leadership? The partisan theory	11
A non-congressional perspective: keeping tabs on coalition partners	13
The empirical debate	14
Committee research in the United States	14
Committee research outside of the United States: parliamentary systems of government and the European Parliament	16
Conclusion	19
Notes	20
3 Theoretical framework: Congressional rationales in a PPG-centred context	21
Using congressional theories outside of the US congress	21
Addressing the ‘elephant in the chamber’: PPGs and the internal organisation of parliaments	22

Using congressional rationales in parliamentary systems	24
Empirical implications for committee structures, compositions, and working procedures	26
Method of the study: large-n cross-national analysis of committee structures, small-n focused comparison of intra-PPG dynamics	35
Case selection for large-n and small-n country comparison	36
Data used per analysis	39
Notes	40
4 Analysing structural features of committee systems	41
Committee structures in 33 parliaments: an overview	41
The general features: committee system for legislation/control, number, and jurisdiction	42
Committees' powers in the legislative process	46
The information-gathering powers of committees	50
Analysing structural variation: the concept of committee autonomy	51
Analysing variation in committee autonomy: operationalising the independent variables	55
Results: what explains the variation in committee structures?	60
Conclusion: informational gains and coalition logic	66
Notes	67
5 Analysing criteria to select committee members	69
The committee systems of the Bundestag, the Dáil, and the Tweede Kamer	69
Determining the size of committees and allocating seats	73
Assigning members to committees: 'self-selection' or 'dictated'?	74
What explains committee assignments?	77
Data set: operationalising the variables	78
Analysis and results committee assignment: who gets what and why?	86
The effect of 'advantages in knowledge' of MPs	88
Committee membership and external interests	112
District characteristics and 'outlying' committees	116
Evidence of a leadership-controlled composition of committees?	120
Gender and country-specific influences	127
Are committees used to 'shadow' coalition partners? The frequency of 'watchdog' chairs	132

Conclusion: specialisation, outliers, and country-specific factors	135
Notes	154
6 Committee workings: What can committee members do?	155
Individual committee members and their PPG	155
Working procedures of committees in the Tweede Kamer and the Bundestag	156
Dynamics between spokespersons and other MPs: the 'standard protocol' in the Bundestag and the Tweede Kamer	156
The influence on the initial position: internal 'layers' of PPGs in the Bundestag and the Tweede Kamer	159
The discussion in intra-PPG working groups	162
The discussion in the PPG meeting	165
In case of no agreement: the 'escalation ladder'	170
The interaction between spokespersons and the leadership	171
