

Contents

179

181

226

Acknowledgments	xiii
Foreword	xv
Introduction. A bridge between two islands: psychoanalytic thinking and the research field	1
PART I
What does Oedipal development have to do with the parents' sex, anyway?	37
One "I want to marry you, Mommy": on Oedipal configurations in same-sex families	39
Two Oedipal configurations: mutual illumination of theory and research findings	75
PART II
What does genetics have to do with kinship, anyway?	105
Three On biological affiliation and kinship	107
Four A new hierarchy: asymmetry between the birth mother and social mother in lesbian couples	118
Five Back to the closet: the issue of the child's genetic origin among gay fathers	145
Six The dual role of the extended family	159
Seven The power of interpellation: kinship conceptualization among same-sex parents and their children	166

PART III

What does procreation have to do with parental coitus, anyway? 179

- Eight Between longing and dread: representations of gamete donors and surrogates in the children's inner-worlds 181
- Nine Gamete donation in light of the primal scene: the parental challenge of integrating the donor's imago 226
-

PART IV

Afterword 259

- Ten Oedipus for everyone? Biases in the Oedipal model: their roots and how to overcome them 261
- Eleven How to work with same-sex families 266
- Coda. The Kids Are All Right: a psychoanalytic reading in Lisa Cholodenko's film 275
- Appendix A* 286
- Appendix B* 287
- Index* 289